Protective measures for employees, customers, and business partners taken

To prevent the spreading of the Coronavirus and to maintain production and delivery times, Uhing has taken several protective measures for employees and customers.

“Some employees are working from their homes, and those in our offices have physically distanced themselves while in production short time working was introduced to ensure proper distances are maintained,” reports Wolfgang Weber, Uhing’s Managing Director. “These regulations also come in handy for employees with children who are in need of care due to school lockdown. All these measures ensure that production can continue.”

Personal business contacts were restricted as far as possible: for example, rolling ring maintenance training for customer employees or sales training for our globally operating sales partners was suspended until after the Corona pandemic. Weber points out: “The Uhing team can still be reached as usual for advice, discussion, service and sales by phone and by e-mail.”

In spite short-time working - a measure that had to be taken at short notice due to a decline in incoming orders - Uhing is still able to supply the entire range of rolling ring drives or clamping and locking elements as well as spare parts. Delivery dates for on-site installations from the automation sector are agreed individually with the customers concerned and rescheduled after estimating the risk.

Uhing will continue to follow the guidelines issued by the Robert Koch Institute and the government that are to contain the virus so that we can all
